Return Reference	Explanation
Pt III, Line 3	In 2017, Code for Progress moved to Philadelphia, and working on organizing community, foundation, and government support for the program. Building relationships and partnerships with existing community groups and leaders will help Code for Progress assure continued effectiveness in training underrepresented communities to lead successful careers in technology development. Current activities include a revamping of the program, with development of a new curriculum for shorter, intensive, level-up programming, which began in January 2018. These new programs will be targeted to a specific topic (i.e. data science, machine learning, penetration testing, blockchain) and designed for program participants who already have a fundamental coding knowledge base, and are looking to take a deep dive on the chosen topic. Programs will start with a pre-program assignment, followed by a week of classroom time with multiple instructors who are highly knowledgeable on that topic. Capping off the program will be a final project that challenges the program participants to apply the skills they have learned. This will be a collaborative effort, during which the instructors will serve as a resource for the program participants as questions arise.
