Educational programs at the Preserve provide hands-on academic opportunities in ecology, environmental science, and wildlife biology for six local school districts in addition to private schools and colleges during the school year and over 60 students during the summer. Restrictions around Covid-19 shifted education programming online in spring and summer 2020 with the creation of materials available to students of all ages through our social media platforms and website. The Preserves summer lecture series also moved online and connected the public with the research of members of our Scientific Advisory Board. 2020 brought a surge in visitors to our trails, with an estimated 35,000 people coming from throughout the Capital Region and beyond. The phenology program continued to be the Preserves main citizen-science initiative. Guided hikes resumed in the fall of 2020 and focused on our diverse ecological communities. Through these efforts, the Preserve aims to promote environmental stewardship, a love of nature, and an appreciation of the natural areas that are integral to life in our region.
