Identifier	Return Reference	Explanation
	990-PF, Part VIII-A, Line 1 - Direct Charitable Activity #1	Cook's Branch Conservancy (CBC)CBC's mission is to be an exemplary model, advocate and source for science-based ecological research, restoration, and conservation of the Great Southern Forest. The two strategic areas of focus are: 1) Ecological Restoration and Research Lab; 2) Advocate for Conservation.The conservancy utilizes tools such as restoration timber harvests, prescribed burning, mechanical and chemical midstory control, invasive species eradication, and replanting in various combinations to meet specific habitat goals. Evidence of the immense progress is undeniable. Aggressive restoration initiatives have enabled the endangered Red-cockaded Woodpecker populations to triple, with 31 groups monitored in 2023. The restored native prairies are bustling with sparrows and other ground nesting species.As an Ecological Restoration and Research Lab, our objectives are to restore and enhance resilient ecosystems, allow the habitat to develop into forests with old growth characteristics, and to conduct both basic and applied research. Priority actions to support these objectives include tracking botanical diversity and prescribed fire effects, bird guild diversity monitoring, forest age class and regeneration modelling, herp community monitoring, and analyzing previously collected data to inform management practices. Offering CBC to our academic partners as a field lab is a high priority. Soil carbon allocation and examining genetic diversity of Crotalus horridus are examples of partner research on CBC in 2023.Cook's Branch Conservancy is currently the only active Monitoreo de Sobrevivencia Invernal (MoSI) station in the United States. MoSI is a global cooperative effort among public agencies, private organizations, and independent bird banders to better understand spatial and habitat-related variation in the overwintering physical condition and survivorship of migratory landbirds. CBC also participates in Monitoring Avian Productivity and Survivorship Program (MAPS), which is a continent-wide collaboration to assist bird conservation through demographic monitoring. All of the data collected during MoSI and MAPS are shared with the Institute of Bird Populations, making them available to researchers globally.As an Advocate of Conservation, our objectives include outreach and education, supporting our partners through information exchange, building support for increased public funding of land conservation, and promoting the permanent protection and restoration of lands adjacent to CBC. Our initiatives to support the above objectives include publishing research findings, sharing collected data through appropriate platforms, hosting convenings of industry and agency partners to address critical issues, and educating representatives as to the value land conservation brings to the community.
