1 Briefly describe the organization's mission:

The mission of the San Francisco Public Press is to enrich civic life by publishing investigative and solutions journalism that engages diverse audiences and promotes public accountability. The San Francisco Public Press (sfpublicpress.org) is a nonprofit, noncommercial news organization that produces independent public-interest journalism about under-covered topics, with a focus on under-served audiences. Online and via community radio station KSFP-LP, broadcasting on 102.5 FM in San Francisco, we offer local investigative and solutions reporting. Coverage areas include environmental protection, housing affordability, public health, transportation safety, homeless services, digital privacy, immigration and elections. For every local election, we produce a comprehensive, multimedia nonpartisan voter guide.

2 Did the organization undertake any significant program services during the year which were not listed on the prior Form 990 or 990-EZ? Yes No

If "Yes," describe these new services on Schedule O.

3 Did the organization cease conducting, or make significant changes in how it conducts, any program services? Yes No

4a (Code: ) (Expenses $ 432,641 including grants of $ 0 ) (Revenue $ 1,551 )

The San Francisco Public Press is a nonprofit, noncommercial news organization that produces independent public-interest journalism about under-covered topics, with a focus on under-served audiences. Online and on community radio station KSFP-LP, broadcasting on 102.5 FM in San Francisco, we offer local investigative and solutions reporting. Coverage areas include environmental protection, housing affordability, public health, transportation safety, homeless services, digital privacy, immigration and elections. The Public Press experienced a leadership transition in early 2024 as Lila LaHood, who previously served as publisher, stepped into the role of executive director, previously held by Michael Stoll for 15 years. Stoll and LaHood co-founded the Public Press with the support of a volunteer steering committee in 2009. Following the 2024 leadership change, Stoll remained on the board of directors and transitioned into a new newsroom role as senior editor so he could return to his first passion, science and environment reporting. We published our biggest project toward the end of 2024: "Exposed: The Human Radiation Experiments at Hunters Point," a series of six articles by Chris Roberts and two podcast episodes by Rebecca Bowe. Michael Stoll served as project editor. The following spring, "Exposed" won the 2025 national Izzy Award from the Park Center for Independent Media at Ithaca College. For "Exposed," our team sifted through thousands of pages of obscure records, interviewed experts and tracked down elderly veterans who were subjected to ethically questionable radiation exposure by the U.S. Navy in San Francisco during the Cold War (see: https://www.sfpublicpress.org/exposed/). What we found reveals a troubling history with violence against Asian Americans in San Francisco. Mel Baker, our director of programming for KSFP, produced an episode looking back at the COVID-19 pandemic and public health lessons learned from it. Election-related episodes with Lila LaHood explored increased spending in judges races that used to go uncontested and a primer on the process for electing party representatives to county central committees, which California voters are asked to do every four years, while Baker explored dueling ballot propositions designed to overhaul the city's commissions and how the existing system came to be. Wilcox and Baker also led production of reporting on volunteer efforts to save culturally significant records in Chinatown, the new dragon unveiled for the Chinese New Year Parade finale and a cultural history of this annual event that dates back nearly 175 years, conflict over amplified sound at outdoor events, and a public art registry for Chinatown. She also reported more broadly on inadequate translation services at City Hall, and neighbors opposing a cannabis dispensary. Wu was the first local journalist to report on significant opposition to a ballot measure aiming to close a section of San Francisco's Great Highway and turn it into a park. She followed up with an in-depth analysis of what would happen to traffic in the neighborhood if this roadway were closed to cars. She brought all of this reporting together for a "Civic" podcast episode. After voters approved the measure in a citywide election, Wu reported on how a group of community members sought to initiate a recall of their own supervisor, who helped put the proposition on the ballot. Throughout 2024, many of our reporters cover issues related to homelessness and housing insecurity. In April, Madison Alvarado reported on the city's efforts to house some migrant families temporarily in hotels. In May, we published a pair of stories by Madison Alvarado and Yesica Prado - supported in part by a grant from The Carter Center - about San Francisco's complex public health response system for helping people who suffer mental health crises on the streets. Alvarado also reported on how outreach to people experiencing homelessness declined as city departments shifted their priorities, how budget cuts threatened food programs for older adults and people with disabilities, how unhoused San Franciscans can vote in elections, a ballot proposition intending to lower rents for more than 550 units designated for low-income seniors, families and people with disabilities, how an increase in encampment sweeps might make it more difficult for people experiencing homelessness to access support services, a profile of a man who struggled with homelessness for 16 years and who now works to increase civic engagement among his neighbors, and how the city of San Francisco could not show that it was following its own encampment clearing policies. Audrey Mei Yi Brown joined our newsroom in 2024 as a Report for America corps member reporting on environmental health equity and corporate accountability. Brown reported on a job training program associated with the new electrification of Bay Area ferries, efforts to do green retrofits on apartment buildings without displacing vulnerable tenants, a government program that gives air purifiers to low-income tenants, how environmental activist groups were using a new data analysis tool to identify the worst toxic sites in the Bay Area. In addition to the "Civic" episodes mentioned above, Sylvie Sturm continued reporting on the overdose crisis - a main focus of her work in 2023 - examining the success of an overdose prevention center in New York as a case study for what might have unfolded in San Francisco had the city pursued previous efforts to open such facilities. She also reported on social service providers seeking to restore Spanish-language programming in San Francisco's jails, a local lawmaker's proposal to strengthen protections for reproductive health care facilities on the receiving end of increased direct, unwanted attention and intimidation efforts from anti-abortion activists, a new mental health program for Spanish speakers that combines an app and trained support coaches from their community, and a program offering culturally attuned addiction recovery support for LGBTQ immigrants from Latin America. Freelance reporter Viji Sundaram reported on California's family courts and efforts to allow electronic recording when court reporters aren't available, efforts to help domestic violence survivors stay housed, legislation that would prevent domestic violence abusers from using apps to track their partners, and how two groups representing low-income survivors of domestic violence sued trial courts in four California counties to get them to resolve the ongoing court reporter shortage. Freelance reporter Seth Rosenfeld continued reporting on the California Public Utilities Commission's regulation of the ride-hailing industry, including a proposed ruling by a state consumer protection unit against Uber for providing substandard rides through Uber Black that was later reduced by an administrative law judge.
